

Dear Corporate Turnaround,

I opened a construction business, [REDACTED], in February of 2001 and hit the ground running...that is until September 11, 2001. All the jobs I had bid and won were postponed by the owners due to the American tragedy and uncertain economic future of the time. My company and I struggled to hold on through the turmoil while making sure that employees were paid weekly but unfortunately creditors were paid minimum payments which increased the debt. The business never recovered and continued trying to survive for the next 5 years while having less work and more debt. My family and I personally assumed the debt incurred since we wanted to pay what was truly owed and chose not to file for Bankruptcy when closing the company in December of 2005. After assuming a second and third job to help pay off the incurred construction company debt, my body stepped in to show me that I could no longer continue this pace. That is where you came in to help. I needed the threatening calls and letters to STOP.

My first interaction with you was back in the early summer of 2009 after I had undergone open heart surgery at 48 years old. When I called you for help, I owed a total of almost $40,000 to credit card companies. Adam Lang and Jarod Fernandez became the liaisons between me and these companies. The credit card companies finally settled for $12, 000 after threatening me with a law suit. Corporate Turnaround saved me more than $16,000 and the stress of numerous threatening calls from the creditors. I paid Corporate Turnaround a percentage of the savings (around $12,000) for their services. Monthly payments were made to Corporate Turnaround and the money was distributed to the companies without me having to correspond with the uncooperative creditors. Thanks to Adam and Jared, I have paid off the credit card companies that had caused this stress in my life.

Sincerely,
